

From the Director

Although West Virginia is a highly ranked destination for many beyond our borders, most of the more than 400,000 folks who hunt, fish, or both in the state, originate from our resident population of about 1.8 million Mountaineers. It could be that, when you allow for hikers, bikers, birders, campers and wildlife and leaf watchers, just about every one of us enjoys the great outdoors.

With service to that public in mind, the DNR is making some major progress enhancing hunting and fishing opportunities and outdoor experiences, along with our conservation partners and you, the license-buying and federal excise tax-paying customers.

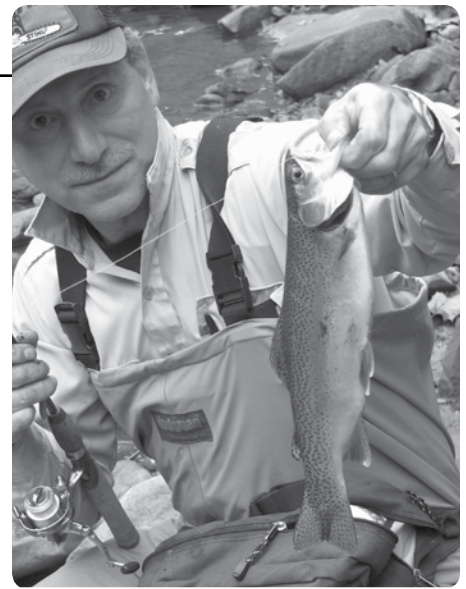

The DNR has embarked on one of the largest single statewide capital improvement eras in its history. While much of this work is inglorious repairs to our State Park and Wildlife Management Area water and sewer systems, cabins, fishing lake dams, and hatcheries, this work is critical to our long-term performance and continuing ability to serve you.

In addition, we remain committed to constructing public boating and fishing access sites and adding to public lands in our Wildlife Management Area system to conserve and manage fish and wildlife for future generations of West Virginians and visitors to the Mountain State.

We're excited about the future. I wish you good fishing in 2017!

Robert A. Fala, Director, West Virginia Division of Natural Resources
